Issued to a diving instructor at the Royal Engineers Diving School in 1972 and used actively in service while training the United Kingdom Special Forces (UKSF), The case back has had military details removed in accordance with UKSF requirements of the time.

Client testimonial:

"I acquired the watch in 1972/3, when I was a diving instructor at the Royal Engineers Diving School.

The diving school was the main unit for training military personnel, we used to teach all the special forces including the SAS, SBS, Marine Commandos, Para's, Gurkhas, and the Royal Navy in underwater engineering techniques, ship's hull clearance, underwater explosive demolitions, underwater concreting, emergency Submarine escape training, and other subsea tasks which I cannot name for security reasons.

This watch has travelled the world on military diving missions, I can only name certain missions, including Channel Islands, Malta, and Christmas Island.

I wore this watch when I replaced the stern gland packing on the Sir Galahad which was sunk in Bluff Cove during the Falklands war.

When I left the Army, I started my career on the oil rigs as a deep-sea Saturation Diver, where again I travelled the world on various diving projects, one of the rigs I dived on was the Piper Alpha which blew up in 1988 with the loss of 165 men, which remains the worst such event in the Oil & Gas industry."
