Taking inspiration from a KABUTO (helmet) specially created for the MR-G series, the MRG-B2000SH evokes the noble spirit and aesthetic sensibility of a samurai commander.

Representing the helmet's maedate (crest), each bezel features the image of a dragon hand carved by a metalsmith highly skilled in the technique of chasing. The case and band, cast with specially-produced metal dies, simulate the rugged look of rusted steel, with finishes of brown and blue aged IP for a time-worn appearance. Casio has teamed up with specialists in traditional arts to unite proud Japanese craftsmanship and advanced technology. £2,000-3,000

AURIFICES REGINAE LONDINI, 18cm high, 22cm wide handle to handle, 99.33ozt. (2)

Adelaide of Saxe-Meiningen was Queen Consort to William IV. In the mid-1830's the King and Queen ordered a large silver dinner service, supplied over a couple of years by the Royal goldsmiths Rundell, Bridge & Co. Pieces were engraved with the King's cypher, the Queen's cypher, or both. Most of this huge service was dispersed, the whole service weighing 10,000 oz.

The highlight of Christie's May 1898 sale of 'Old English Silver plate' was 'A large Service of Plates and Dishes, &c. richly chased and weighing 10,000 ounces, formerly the Property of QUEEN ADELAIDE', including 168 dinner plates, 30 soup plates, a circular bread basket, four wine coolers, two pairs of soup tureens, six sauce tureens, and various meat and serving dishes, all variously engraved with either the cyphers of William IV and the Queen, or just that of Queen Adelaide. These particular sauce tureens were acquired by Sir Lewis Richardson who owned Harrington House, now The Russian Embassy, at 13 Kensington Palace Gardens, and have passed through descent to the current owner. Sir Lewis Richardson was born in 1873 in Birmingham and emigrated to South Africa with his parents in 1882. The Richardsons were a prominent family in 19th century Port Elizabeth, largely instrumental in Port Elizabeth's rise as an economic force in the late 19th and early 20th century. Originally making their money in the agricultural sector, their first business was in the trade of ostrich feathers, before engaging in the purchase and export of wool. £10,000-15,000
